ONGOING WORK

I am currently completing and/or revising several article-length pieces relative to the political economyof resource development and to the native and working class aspects of northern and western Canadian history,a chapter-length biography of Premier Thomas Greenway for a new work on the Premiers of Manitoba, thetwo historiographical pieces listed under works in progress and two shorter encyclopaedia entries for a new*Encyclopaedia of Manitoba History* . In the longer-term (the next 7 years) my research/publication goals includethe preparation of three book-length studies. The first, which has received generous grant support from twosources and which already has a potential publisher (University of Manitoba Press), expands upon the workwhich I began in The People's Co-op. Essentially a broad-based study of Winnipeg's very active labour, left-wing, and other social movements, this project, tentatively entitled, Left-Wing Winnipeg: Shaping anOppositional Consciousness, from Riel to Murray will examine the causes, consequences, and changing natureof popular radicalism in Winnipeg from the 1860s to the present. The second major project also deals with theCity of Winnipeg. This work focusses upon the inter-war period - a truly crucial era in Winnipeg's history.Wracked by the human losses associated with the "Great War", the economic losses associated with losing itsmonopoly over western Canadian markets and the psychological impact of playing host to North America's mostdramatic and prolonged general strike, Winnipeg entered the "stuttering twenties" and the "traumatic thirties"already in dire straits. Within this context, Winnipeg will be examined as a "community of communities" -defined by geography, class, ethnicity and gender - all of which sought to cope with the crises of this period inunique fashions. The third and final project will be a broad ranging examination of the relationship betweenhumans and the environment in the Canadian mid-north. The working title for this project is Constructing theNorth: Nature and Humanity in the Sub-Arctic. This returns me to the field of northern studies, the subject ofmy most recent book, Formidable Heritage. However, it also signals a major shift in my interests towards thefields of environmental and First Nations History.

As these projects approach completion I intend to take a different tack in my research. As a result ofgiving a paper on mine financing and technological innovation at a mining history conference, it was broughtto my attention that my work on the Whitney family's involvement in mine financing is somewhat unique. (Partof this research is included in Formidable Heritage) In effect, no one has undertaken a scholarly analysis of theeconomic role played by this prominent New York family. As a result, I am conducting a preliminary searchfor materials on this family with an eye towards writing an economic and social biography of the family duringthe 19th and 20th centuries.

FIELDS OF ACADEMIC INTEREST AND EXPERTISE

My three Ph.D. candidacy fields were modern Canadian history, 19th century British history andAmerican history, 1824-1920. Within all three fields my area of specialization was social/labour/economichistory. Although not included in my candidacy fields, I also did graduate work in the history of popularradicalism, from the French Revolution to the present, and in Empire/Commonwealth history, 1860-1960. Atthe Honours level I did course work on modern Eastern European history and 20th century American history.

I have taught a wide variety of classes on Canada's political, economic, social and labour history, aswell as specifically western and northern Canadian courses, an interdisciplinary course in Canadian studies andcomparative courses - at both the undergraduate and graduate levels - in Canadian and US history. I am alsodeveloping a series of new courses for the Canadian Studies programme that we are implementing at UND.Courses in the history of the First Nations' People of Canada and of the Canadian West have already beenoffered as part of this programme, while it is hoped that new courses on the Canadian North, the French inColonial America and on the North American working class will all be developed over the next few years.

In my present position at UND I have also been given the opportunity to expand my interest andexpertise in various aspects of US History. In addition to teaching the US survey course, which I offer almostevery semester, my graduate teaching load has expanded - under the title of North American studies - to includereading and research seminars in modern Canadian and US history, the graduate course in historiography andthe undergraduate historiography and methods class.

Since 1996 I have successfully supervised eleven M.A. theses in the fields of North American economic,native, intellectual, labour, women's and western history and British Imperial History. I am currentlysupervising three M.A. thesis projects (at various stages of development) and serve as a committee member onten other M.A. thesis committees in the Department of History. I have also served as the outside member forsix Ph.D. committees in related fields (completed), and am presently serving in that capacity on one more Ph.D.committee in the Department of Educational Leadership as well as one in my Department's new joint Ph.D.programme.

Finally, I have also expanded our Department's offerings in British and British Imperial history. I havedeveloped a two course package on British Empire/Commonwealth history, which I offer at the upper divisionlevel. I have also conducted a graduate seminar on British Social and Labour History.
